EMPLOYERS URGED TO AID RECRUITING

PRESIDENT CHAIRMAN OF THE
C.M.A. BROADCASTS MESSAGE
OVER NATIONAL NETWORK ON MAY 20th

My words tonight are addressed to Canadian employers—to the Nation's industrial, commercial and financial leaders—wherever they may be—and of every class and kind—large or small.

On Sunday evening, May 11, the Minister of National Defence, Colonel the Hon. J. L. Ralston, opened Canada's first recruiting campaign, with a nation call for 32,000 men to enlist in the Canadian Active Army in the following two months.

Colonel Ralston has asked me to repeat that call tonight, in a form especially directed to those of you who are employers of Canadian labor—to ask more—much more—than your mere passive support in this campaign for fighting men—to make it clear that your active co-operation is critically needed, if the right number and type of men are to be found—and to tell how you can help—how you must help if we are not to flag, or falter, or fail, in this supreme effort to achieve victory, against all odds.

It is no longer a question of "Can we spare this or that man?" It is now a question simply of: "We must spare any, and every man that the fighting services require and how can we rearrange our factory, or our business, so that we can get along efficiently without them?"

Warns Employers

A great many employers have been doing this ever since the war commenced and are continuing to do so. Yet the plain facts are that in every larger number of employers, in every part of Canada, have not yet awakened to this responsibility for encouraging enlistments, and for supplying man power to the Army, and the other forces.

It is in this latter class that my words are directed tonight and I would urge you, in your own vital interests and those of the Nation, to provide the inspiration that is needed to fill the Army's ranks.

You will say: "We are providing your materials of war. We cannot spare our trained men."

To this I must answer: "There is no need for you to make munitions and weapons of war unless you can also give us the men to use and to wield them."

Although this grim type of war we are now waging is highly mechanized, yet every machine and every complex weapon requires skilled hands and strong minds to operate and direct them.

Never before has it been so urgently necessary for us to mobilize as fighting troops the men who are young, strong, intelligent and courageous. Our second best are not good enough to pit against the evil but mighty military machine that is seeking to destroy our civilization.

But some of you will say: "We cannot order or compel our employees to enlist. They are free agents to do as they think best."

Decision is Worker's

What you say is true only in part. Certainly you can not coerce any employee to enlist. The decision is his to make. But you can do a great deal to make that decision possible.

You can remove discouragement and coldness from your attitude toward a prospective recruit who works for you.

You can cheerfully assure him that his job is safe if he needs to take a day or two off to receive his complete medical examination—just in case he should be unable to qualify for military service.

You can actively support the Army Recruiting Campaign by having posters clearly displayed in your place of business, and by encouraging your senior employees who have served with distinction in the last war to give recruiting addresses to your younger men.

Many employers will say: "This is strong talk. You are expecting too much from us. We cannot let our key men go. You will dislocate our whole organization. Surely if I pay my taxes and deliver my quota of war materials that is all you can fairly expect of me?"

I can only reply: "This is intended to be strong talk, and even stronger action is required from you if your stake in this Dominion and in this civilization of ours is to survive at all; and if our aims are to prevail against the vast forces which are now arrayed against us."

As far as your "key men" are concerned it is well to remember that no one is indispensable, even if your temporary loss of their services may place a greater strain on your own executive capacity.

Army Co-operates

The Army is actively co-operating with employers in delaying the mobilization of those who can truly be termed "key men" of essential war industries. Instructions have been from National Defence Headquarters to every District Officer Commanding, which open with the following words:

"It is considered that all recruiting agencies should co-operate with war industries so that the man power of the country will be used to the best possible advantage."

The Army in turn asks your fullest co-operation to the end that this "key man" principle be interpreted by you with the strictest fairness and patriotism.

Review your lists of employees with this in mind, and decide not how few—but how many—can be spared. Take them into your confidence, and point the way in which their duties, with both tact and persuasive power.

There is another way in which the Army is trying to co-operate with you employers. Realizing the potential scarcity of skilled labor, the Army has established its own trade schools and trade courses. It is doing everything possible to avoid competition with war industry, for their skilled workers.

If the Canadian Army can use constructive imagination to improve its own requirements of tradesmen, cannot you similarly develop new key men from the older hands whom you can train to replace those younger workers required by the Dominion now.

The Armed Services of this country have taken only 2.2 per cent of our whole population at this time. Although we have a 20 per cent greater population today than a generation ago, we have mobilized for active service 10 per cent less than the number enlisted on the 31st of March, 1918, after a similar period of war.

The Labour Supply Board have just reported that Army enlistments have not injuriously affected Canadian industry.

Moreover it has been estimated that our armed forces could, if necessary, be increased from the present 2.2 per cent up to six or seven per cent of our population without materially affecting the maximum output of our war industries.

Influence on U.S.

Another factor, which is too frequently overlooked by Canadian employers and business leaders, is the powerful influence of our example upon the United States. We can be sure that any sign of weakness, or hesitancy, or lethargy, that is shown in our war effort here, will find plenty of support in the isolationist minority of the United States.

Similarly, every superb effort we put forth—every new and inspiring sacrifice we make—will serve to stimulate the great and growing forces which are being aligned behind us in our friendly and powerful neighbor.

There is one harsh but inspiring fact that I wish to grasp and to act upon. It is simply that we can never finish this war unless and until we have a preponderance in trained fighting man power.

There is no room for any "army" satisfaction about the relative size of populations of the British and German Empires. We must muster every man that can possibly be combed out of our industrial and business organizations, while still preserving their productive efficiency and output.

Canada has no passive or secondary part to play in this war. Ours is the primary responsibility for preparing a great and powerful armed striking force.

This is the Empire's most secure base, and from it can best be forged the offensive means of victory. Of all self-governing portions of the Commonwealth, Canada is in the best position to prepare and to send military forces, with a minimum of hindrance, to whatever part of the world they can best attack and destroy the Hun.

This is the highest objective to which any country could devote its full energies, in this life and death struggle upon which we are engaged. It is one to inspire the imagination first of you more mature men—who are the leaders of Canadian industry and commerce, and who are the employers of Canadian labor. You must best understand this imperative need. Many of you served in another war a generation ago. This is the delayed climax of that struggle. This is the supreme testing ground of our institutions and of our individual capacity for endurance.

Must Not Fail

If you should fail to pass on this torch of inspiration to the younger and fighting at the hand of the Dominion—it will not be passed at all. It will go out with the lamps of Europe, never to be lit again in your time or in the time of your children's children.

But it need not and will not go out. Let it be said by succeeding generations in this Dominion that her employers of labor made the greatest contribution to victory from any section of her people—not just by bearing their tax burdens cheerfully—not simply by turning out the materials and weapons of war—but above all by encouraging in every possible way, their young and physically fit workers to enlist in the armed forces—by removing every obstacle from such enlistment—by bearing heavier executive burdens themselves in order that their "key men" might be released—by giving their own sons as an example, and as a supreme assurance for the final triumph, of light and freedom, over darkness and bondage.

FARM BOYS' CAMP AT LLOYD'S EXHIBITION

During the past eight years nearly eight hundred boys have taken advantage of the opportunity offered by attending the Farm Boys' Camp held in connection with the Lloydminster Exhibition. In addition to an enjoyable holiday with liberal amounts of entertainment, the boys receive instruction in judging all kinds of livestock and identification.

The camp is in charge of men who are both outstanding and have had long experience in junior activities. Mr. J. S. Palmer, camp superintendent, Mr. H. B. Polkinghorne, camp secretary of Marsden, Sask., and Professor Ramsay of the University of Saskatchewan, instructor.

The 1941 camp will be held during the Lloydminster Exhibition, July 21st, 22nd and 23rd. Boys old enough to take advantage of the instruction and not over 18 years of age are invited to attend. The van, which is one dollar camp fee; the boys are the guests of the Exhibition Association. For further information, or application forms, apply to G. M. What a Little ADVERTISEMENT Can do

If You Are A Merchant

It can tell people about the fancy or stylish new stocks of merchandise you have just put in for Spring, Summer, Fall or Winter trade. People are always interested in knowing where they can obtain the newest and best.

It can sell that slow-moving stock on your shelves. It can help you dispose of your left-overs or seasonal goods—some of which will soon be not so seasonable.

It can increase your turnover, reduce stocks on hand and add to your profits and bank account.

If You Sell Services

It can tell people what you have to offer, attract customers and increase your sales and profits. Garages, Laundries, Cleaners and Dyers, Beauty Shops and the like, which are wise enough to advertise always get the cream in their lines.

World of Wheat

H. G. L. Strange,
Director, Research Department,
Searle Grain Company, Ltd.

Mustard plants are bad weeds. The roots of the mustards are much more extensive than the roots of the wheat plant. The mustard plant never grows very high above the ground, and so its destruction is often neglected, but if farmers could see its great mass of roots going down five feet or more, and could see the vast quantity of precious moisture that a single mustard plant consumes, they would not rest until mustard was eliminated from their farms.

A good summerfallow will induce most of the mustard seeds in the top three inches of soil to germinate and grow, and then the plants can be cultivated and destroyed, but we must not forget the seeds that are in the bottom three inches and that cannot be killed until the land is again ploughed and these seeds brought up near the surface to germinate.

It takes, therefore, two good summerfallows, with a crop in between, to destroy all the mustard seeds in the top six inches of soil. The important thing is to stop the plants from setting to seed, for each single plant may scatter over one hundred living seeds.

In recent years the chemical Cyanamid, applied as dust, has been found to be most effective for destroying mustard.

Following factors have tended to raise price—May estimate of India's wheat crop down 10 million bushels from April—Mexico's wheat acreage and estimated production below 1940—Rust, insect damage and flooding are reported from many sections of U.S. winter wheat area.

In Europe farm work has been disrupted by unfavorable weather and insufficient labor and equipment.

Following factors have tended to lower price—The crop in U.S. northwest are unusually favorable—Canadian spring wheat prospects are very favorable—Weather conditions have been very favorable recently in Argentina for seeding—The United States has established fixed standards for making of bread to conserve wheat supplies.

WAGE WAR ON WEEDS

THEY BORE THE SOIL.

The early completion of spring planting has provided an exceptional opportunity for an aggressive weed eradication programme this year. Already the "showy" weeds of early summer, daisies, sheep sorrel, cinquefoil and many others are blotting out the verdant foliage of meadows and pastures; and mustard will soon be flaunting its golden flowers in fields and wide over the grain fields. Other less apparent weeds, couch or quack grass, sow thistle and bindweed are busy obtaining a foothold on the crops. Later in the summer, their work of destruction will be more conspicuous.

News reports from Germany tell of the government's efforts to encourage the people to use daisies, dandelions and other weeds as substitutes for vegetables in the daily diet. Fortunately, we in Canada do not need to fall back on such objectionable forms of plant growth for food purposes, and there are more pleasant ways of getting rid of them than by eating them. War on weeds can be waged in many ways. There are, however, seven weapons that have proven especially effective: a definite determination to get rid of weeds, clean seed, crop rotation, thorough cultivation, suitable fertility conditions, smother crops and chemical weed killers.

Powdered cyanamid of special weed-killer grade has proven very effective in controlling mustard in grain fields. Properly applied, it destroys the mustard without injuring the grain.

Patches of weeds can be eradicated most economically and effectively by chemical weed killer. Several types of these are very effective with annual and shallow-rooted perennials, but those containing sodium chlorate have proven most effective in the destruction of deep rooted perennials such as bind weed, couch grass and perennial sow-thistles.

Where weeds are thriving over the whole field, the combination of an early season summer fallow plus the growing of buckwheat, millet or rape as a smother crop is the most practical control method. Experience indicates however, that the cover crop should be aided by a liberal application of fertilizer 2-12-6 or 2-16-6 applied in the row with the seed.

This will enable the crop to make the rapid growth necessary to quickly form a dense covering.

While waging war against weeds, one should not overlook the fact that from both an individual and national standpoint weeds do perform a valuable service in drawing attention to the rapid depletion of soil fertility. The crimson blanket that sheep sorrel casts over meadows in many sections of the country in early summer indicates a probable lack of lime in the soil. Bluet, the little pale blue flowered plant, and rough cinquefoil, the yellow flowered plant that grows in meadows, generally indicate

Canadian Pacific Builds First Canadian Tank

It was a proud day for the Canadian Pacific Railway's Angus Shops at Montreal when D. C. Coleman, vice-president, announced to a gathering of Government officials, company officers, workers and newspaper men that he had great pleasure in delivering the first Canadian-built tank to the Canadian Army. "The machine," he said, "is the child of sweat and tears. It will be followed by hundreds and thousands of others to help the Empire to its victory."

The tank was gratefully accepted by the Hon. C. D. Howe, Minister of Munitions and Supply, who praised Mr. Coleman, H. B. Bowen, chief of motive power and rolling stock, and other Canadian Pacific men for the effort they had put into building this splendid war machine. He, in turn, gave the tank and all others to come of the Angus assembly line to the Hon. J. L. Ralston, Minister of National Defence, who thanked the Canadian Pacific workers for the fine job they had accomplished. "You men have put your whole heart into this job," he said. He also mentioned that 300 of the thousands of tanks being made at the Angus Shops were being produced for the British Purchasing Commission.

The picture above shows Mr. Coleman officially delivering the first tank to the Department of Munitions and Supply and, next, Corp. Colin Straton, of the Royal Tank Regiment, a veteran of Dunkirk, commencing an Angus worker on the construction of the tank.

and growing hatred. They do not believe a word of the Paris Radio and Press, controlled by the Germans and staffed by Frenchmen whom they consider traitors. They listen eagerly to the French transmissions of the B.B.C.

French women will shake their skirts as they step out of the Metro after brushing against German soldiers. The showing of a German news film frequently provokes disturbances. In a Dieppe cinema recently a film showing the exploits of the German and Italian air forces provoked cries of "Down with Hitler—down with Mussolini!" Result, a fine of 1,000,000 francs imposed upon the town.

Hitler was never more cunning than when he decided to leave that part of France which was of no use to him economically or militarily in the illusion of freedom and to stay Mussolini's grasping hand in the seizure of the French African Empire. Had the Germans occupied the whole of metropolitan France and the Italians even a part of the Empire, the spirit of resistance would soon have flamed up again.

SCRATCHING GRAVEL ON OUR OWN FARMS

"In homely terms it is then—what matter if, when their war is over, we scratch gravel, provided it is our own gravel; what matter if we find ourselves poor, provided our poverty is of that honest kind, the sharing of which invokes the true and equal dignity of man?" Those words were spoken by a great patriot, Robert Menzies of Australia, in an address broadcast from New York on May 13, 1941, when he urged the need for sacrifice on the part of every citizen of the British Commonwealth, in order that the cause of freedom shall prevail.

Scratching gravel is indeed a homely term, one readily understood by the farmer who "acorns not with sun-browned hands to scrape acquaintance with his lands." Fortunate is the farmer who lives in a country

THESE smiling girls in overalls are ready to give Canadian farmers a helping hand during the busy summer months. They are all members of the Ontario Women's Land Army, organized by a group of women who anticipated a shortage of farm labor with so many men being absorbed

WORDS OF INSPIRATION
A Thought A Day
For a People At War
"The American people have recognized the catastrophic quality of a totalitarian victory and by an overwhelming majority they have endorsed every step along the way of our present posture."—U. S. Navy Secretary Frank Knox.

HITLER OFFERS FINE

Though the Congress of the United States voluntarily surrendered the historic American right of freedom of the seas, by forbidding American ships to enter "combat zones" in time of war, now we find that this act of self-abnegation has not purchased us immunity from Hitler's guns. On the unimpeachable authority of our State Department it has been established that the steamship Robin Moor was sunk deliberately by a German submarine whose commander was fully aware that the vessel was American. She was not sunk in any "combat zone," but on the high seas of the broad Atlantic. She was sunk while engaged in lawful trade. She was carrying no munitions. She was bound on a voyage which was entirely proper under the terms of our self-imposed Neutrality Act. But the Atlantic is her grave, and presumably the grave of the greater part of her passengers and crew. Hitler has fired his first shot against the United States. His echoes will reverberate, says the New York Times.

What possible explanation can the Nazis give that will satisfy the Government and the people of the United States? They can say—as they have said on so many other similar occasions, and as they say now—that they didn't do it, and second, that if they did, it must have been all right. In other words, they are saying, despite first-hand official evidence to the contrary, that it is to be "strongly doubted" whether a German submarine was guilty of this action, but that, if "by any chance" this was the case, then it can be "said with certainty" that the U-

WORLD'S WEEK

BY HAROLD L. WEIR

Associate Editor of the "Edmonton Bulletin" and author of the daily column "From the News."

Whatever may happen in Russia, Africa, Syria or in the Atlantic, the primary consideration of the war is still the volume of American aid that is going and will go to Britain.

The Nazis and their allies have sought, with rather alarming success, to create the impression throughout the world that the volume of American planes and munitions production is insignificant and that only a small percentage of what is produced reaches Britain because of the air blockade of Britain. Every labor disturbance in American defence industries, every American newspaper article or speech asserting that American defence is weak, or the defence production negligible has been published by the alert Nazi propaganda machine and over the radio in countries they wish to influence in Europe, South America, the Levant and other parts of the world.

The purpose has been to convince, by apparent evidence from American sources, all these countries that a Nazi victory is imminent and inevitable, and that Germany will win the war before the United States is strong enough to play a determining part.

When it is remembered that Germany has been spending a quarter of a million dollars a month on anti-American propaganda in the Argentine alone, and correspondingly greater sums in France, Spain, Portugal, Turkey and other areas more immediately involved in the war, the importance of this despised propaganda in the German war plans can be better appreciated.

As a matter of fact, the attitude of every country that has become involved in this war, one way or another since the outbreak of 1940, has been influenced to a greater or lesser degree by what they believed was the status of the United States.

The belief that Great Britain and her allies were going to be knocked out by Germany before the American aid could reach Britain had a lot to do with the Vichy decision to co-operate with Hitler.

A SAD LETTER.

Miss Agnes Canham writing from Hull, England, a centre Canadian readers already know as having been a centre of Nazi bombing tells a sad and story to friends here, friends made when she was an "exchange teacher" this district some years ago.

She writes in part: (May 14) ... my favorite brother died suddenly three weeks ago ... he had been much over-worked since the war as assistant superintendent of the telephone service in Hull. Then he had some teeth extracted and collapsed after it ... he was ill a fortnight ... we were having intensive raids at the time and he could not be moved quickly when the sirens went, so he had to be nursed in a shelter, and in a shelter in his garden my dear brother died. He had just moved into a lovely home with a beautiful garden and he was so proud of it ... Since his death his home has been bombed and roof, ceilings, doors and windows were destroyed.

You may have heard of the "blitz" of the London area. Well it was Hull that had it for two long hellish nights. We had waves and waves of bombers over for about seven hours with terrific bombing, land mines and thousands of incendiary bombs. All the main shopping streets, the centre of the town have been utterly destroyed by bombs and fire. Every big store is gone—cinemas, churches, works of every description and half the schools have been hit; my own school is in a terrible state. In addition all the suburbs have been bombed—in every part of the city are hundreds of houses damaged and many completely down to a heap of rubble. In addition to individual families, 3000 victims were buried in a communal grave, one of them being a young teacher of 21, an only daughter, from a nearby school. All schools are closed until further notice and teachers are on duty in connection with evacuation of the homeless. Two of our teachers were fire-watching on the night when our school was burnt. They had dreadful experiences, in a ring of fire and bombs falling all around, while they struggled to put out the blaze. My nephew was on duty at his school. He heard a screaming bomb coming—flung himself on the ground when the school got a direct hit. Part of it collapsed but fortunately fell away from him.

We cannot get a meal in the city themselves afraid of what may happen to them if Germany wins. They feel they cannot afford to be tied up with the losing side in a struggle for survival.

All this throws an exceedingly high light on the situation confronting the United States in the matter of the Robin Moor and the closure of German consulates.

Presumably in a fit of temper, Hitler has ordered American consuls officials, both in Germany and in occupied countries, to leave for home. I say "presumably" because this swift retaliation may be deliberate and calculated.

All the time Hitler has been heaping contempt upon the United States for the benefit of the countries he wishes to delude, privately he has been treating the United States with reasonable courtesy and consideration.

The German attitude changed very suddenly and significantly at the time the Robin Moor was sunk.

The sinking itself was a deliberate affront. Germany's official reaction to it was even more insulting.

And now comes this expulsion of consular officials to bring about an even greater deterioration in German-American relations.

Hitler troubles no longer to conceal his hatred for the American people. He has thrown off all concealment for one of two reasons:

1. He thinks he is quite safe in further humiliating Americans in the eyes of the world because he is sure they will not fight, or.

2. He is sure that the United States will fight and that the double game is now up.

This is illustrated how completely the fate of the world hangs upon American action in the next few weeks or even days.

It is not likely that President Roosevelt will declare war on the Axis, although such an action would have a highly salutary effect.

But to secure a declaration of war from the Congress might involve endless political involvements unnecessary to the job to be done.

The President can, however, employ the American navy in full strength to sink Nazi raiders and secure the safe transport of American goods to Britain.

If he fails to do this, every country in the world except Britain will subscribe to Germany's victory.

If he does this, every country in the world will shortly be crowding to climb aboard the victorious British band wagon.

and transport has been difficult but it is marvellous how the authorities are tackling the demolition of dangerous buildings and clearing up the place. The centre of the city is just a mass of charred ruins.

(Miss Canham remarks in her next paragraph that her home in Beech Grove has been twice bombed and she is going to spend the summer with a friend, the owner of the village school at North Croft, Catwick, E. Yorks. She also speaks of retiring from teaching at the end of August).

... We are all agog with the fantastic news of Hull's coming here. I hope it means a breaking of the evil power around us. I have always felt we could not win by mere brute force. Some other factor must enter. Food is scarce and very monotonous.

PLAN NOW TO COME TO

We hear that a quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of the bride's parents at Amisk, when Miss Muriel Lundberg and Mr. Roy Sargeant were united in marriage on Thursday last. Congratulations!

Miss Gladys Haynes of Saskatoon is holidaying at her home for a week or so.

Mr. and Mrs. Douglas Carl and family moved to Fernintosh at the week end where Doug has been appointed agent for the Federal Grain Co.

We welcome Mr. and Mrs. Bakland of Hughenden, who has taken over Bond's Service Station.

A good attendance was out to Sunday School and church on Sunday. It is expected the services will continue in the Hall through the Summer months.

Monday morning the paint crew was busy painting the annex of the Alberta Pool elevator.

GILT EDGE

Ken Teeter received the strap a short time ago. Have your hands cooled off yet, Ken?

Miss Sylvia Teeter visited Miss Clara Denoncourt last week end.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Teeter visited across the river with the Fletcher family on Sunday last.

Tom Goddard spent a very wet night on the river hills. How come you were out so late, Tom?

Mayfield and White Cloud played off for the softball cup on Wednesday last, Mayfield being the winner.

John O'Connor won the ham that was raffled off to pay for our share of the Truck Event cups and medals.

HEATH

Mr. and Mrs. Bauer of Ranfurly were Sunday visitors with Mrs. Bauer's parents, Mr. and Mrs. E. L. B. McLeod.

The infant daughter of the Bauers was baptised on Sunday at St. Patrick's church by the Rev. A. A. Court.

Mrs. Day, Teddy and Beverly returned to Ranfurly with the Bauers for a few days' visit.

Mrs. Lally and Joyce have opened their cottage at Clear Lake for the season.

Weather permitting on Wednesday, the first dance of the season will take place on the Dance Floor at Clear Lake.

EDGERTON

A pre-nuptial shower for Joyce Reynolds was held at the home of Mrs. J. I. Sawyer on the evening of Monday, June 16th. More than fifty ladies and girls attended, taxing seating capacity to the very limit. A novel idea was used for some of the smaller gifts; it was in the form of a wishing well, complete with windmills and bucket, the whole thing decorated in pink and white. Many were the gifts "drawn up" by the lucky bride-to-be. Another unusual feature of this shower, was a noticeable absence of duplicate gifts. After all the parcels had been opened and displayed, the guest of honor thanked those assembled in a brief but heart-felt speech, following which, a delightful lunch was served by the hostess, and many willing helpers.

The C.G.I.T. staged a concert and playlet on Tuesday evening, June 17, in Pawsey's Hall. It is understood that it was in aid of their "Camp

Mr. W. Mills and Mr. W. Moffatt are planning to leave for the coast by auto at the end of the week.

On Wednesday evening a shower was held in honor of Miss Jean Wiley the popular young bride-to-be at the home of Mrs. Arthur Patterson.

Mayor M. L. Forster and Town Clerk Kenny are away this week to Calgary where they will be delegates to the Annual Convention of Alberta Municipalities.

Mr. W. C. Woods has left to spend the summer with friends in Ontario. A large number of local Ontarians and Rebekahs went to Hardisty for the dedication services of the new I.O.O.F. hall there.

Mr. R. Prosser is around this week with a pronounced limp, the result of a sprained leg received while playing softball.

At the recent golf tournament at Edgerton Miss V. Walton and Mr. F. Dickens of Wainwright were winners.

Fund. Possibly owing to poor road conditions and lack of advertising, the affair was not very well attended, which was most disappointing to the girls.

Principal C. G. and Mrs. Welch were the guests of honor last Thursday evening, when the H.S. students held their annual pre-dinner banquet in the school basement. Thirty-three were catered for, and unlimited food, contests, quizzes—plus the knowledge that holidays are in the offing—put everyone in a gay mood which made the evening a complete success.

Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Pawsey motored to Edmonton Thursday morning, on a "pleasure with business" trip.

Messrs. F. Ramsay, P. Mitchell, T. Shaw and A. W. Montgomery, motored to Chauvin last Thursday evening to attend the Masonic Lodge there, where it is understood that first degree work was put on.

A bridge, whist and cribbage party in aid of the Red Cross was held on the evening of the 19th in Pawsey's Hall, but for a variety of reasons it was not very well attended. We feel sorry for the officers and committees in charge, as it is understood that the net results were far from satisfying when compared to the time and trouble involved—and wasted—to make the evening a success.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Gilmour and family were Sunday visitors to the H. E. Spencer home.

The annual Anglican W.A. garden party will be held Thursday next, 25th June, in the spacious grounds of Mr. and Mrs. P. S. Pawsey. We hear from an authoritative source that it is to be better than ever this year, so don't pass it up. It is in a good cause, there will be lots of fun, and plenty of food, all for a very small outlay.

The Women's Welfare Club held their monthly meeting on Thursday at the home of Mrs. Bert Kitchen when the Grand-mothers of the district were entertained. There was one great-grandmother present, Mrs. Genevieve Templeton. Everyone had an enjoyable afternoon and were served with a delicious lunch.

Owing to rain, the Stampede at the River had to be postponed.

All the kids are on their toes this week as it is exam week.

Some of the local boys did good at the Kinsella Stampede last week, three of them getting into the finals.

The Stampede will be held at the river on Wednesday, the 25th, with open-air dance at night.

RENDEZ-VOUS IN VIENNA

BY LESLIE HAMILTON

CHAPTER FIVE

At a few minutes past eight o'clock the next morning, greetings over, Munroe joined the Count and Countess at breakfast, ready waiting, after which they re-assembled once again for a council of ways and means, as he termed it the previous evening.

"There are several points which have occurred to me since yesterday," Rex began; "no wonder if you would mind answering a few questions in order to complete my mental picture of the situation."

"Not at all," von Armburg assured him. "Ask anything you wish, Mr. Munroe; in fact, as you will be playing a lone hand in this matter, I think it would be better for you to take charge of the entire proceedings and formulate your own plan of campaign."

"Very good," Munroe thanked him, and resumed by asking: "Well, then, as a starter, I cannot help but feel that someone on the spot would have been able to handle it far easier than I can. After all, I'm a foreigner, and a stranger to Vienna; I can't speak the language, and, furthermore, I'll have to depend upon my own abilities entirely. It seems to me, therefore, as though the normal difficulties under the circumstances are far more hazardous in my case; in fact, they're multiplied tremendously, in my opinion."

"I had thought of it," replied the nobleman. "But the difficulties confronting a fellow countryman are actually much greater; even allowing for the advantage a knowledge of the language and other factors would give him. In addition," he continued, with the precise exposition of a barrier presenting a brief, "besides being doubly suspected of attempting to smuggle money or valuables out of the country, a German subject cannot simply apply for and obtain a passport at will. They are also subject to unheard of treatment at the frontier; whereas, there are certain limits even Hitler's minions dare not overstep in dealing with foreign nationals—particularly Englishmen—at least until all pretence ceases and diplomatic relations with Great Britain are definitely suspended. Then again, granted that a member of our Party had no trouble in securing a passport, and permission to leave the Reich; what for other countries are not easily obtained by German nationals, while finally, the Count concluded, "although I should be justified in requesting a political complot to face the risks attendant upon the recovery of our confidential papers, to ask such a messenger to be laden with Olga and the picture is quite another story altogether. They are matters which affect our family in a personal sense, and since I do not think it wise to attempt anything less than all three objectives at the same time, I was forced to drop that idea completely."

"Thank you for your lucid explanation, Count Felix. It also clarifies a brief allusion to the language handicap which Sir Charles made to me in London. However, let's take the next item. What about the documents? Where are they hidden? What do they look like?" Munroe fired his barrage of questions with machine-gun-like rapidity. "They will be so much Greek to me," he added, "unless it will be okay to let Olga check them out for me, it should be the successful in establishing contact with her and recovering them."

"I do not think you will fail to achieve that much, Mr. Munroe," the Countess interrupted, in confident tones, flashing Rex a look of supreme faith in his ability to do so.

"You can be quite certain, my dear, that Mr. Munroe will strain every effort to go far beyond that stage," her husband assured her, returning a fond glance of encouragement towards his wife and at the same time informing his guest that the papers were carefully hidden in their residence in Vienna.

"You cannot mistake them, either," he continued, "for they are closely typed on thin paper and enclosed in a black monero leather folder which is, incidentally, the only article contained in a small drawer ingeniously concealed in the back of the drawing room mantle; and which in turn, is only accessible after you have freed the mantle from its usual position, done by turning both supporting pillars, one on either side, towards the centre of the fireplace until you hear a soft click which follows the release of the locking mechanism. You can then lift the mantle swing it outwards when the drawer can be easily seen and withdrawn. With respect to my sister-in-law checking the papers for you, if only it would be advisable you have my permission for her to do so, as Olga knows of my political affiliation of course, and is thoroughly trustworthy."

"So much for that end of the business," Rex thanked him, his fertile imagination forming a quick mental picture of the odd but effective hiding place which the nobleman had just described. "What about the painting? What's the story there?" were his next queries, after a brief pause.

"It is hanging in the same room in an antique and heavily gilded frame," the Countess volunteered, describing the subject of the oil master in full detail. "I'll just have to gamble on how, where and when I can get in touch with her."

"Which reminds me," the Countess suddenly bethought herself. "I have a very good photograph of my sister which was taken in Vienna about three years ago, but it is a splendid likeness and will help Mr. Munroe to recognize Olga quite easily."

"That is something I was going to request in any event," Rex looked with keen interest towards his hostess. "Because the scheme I have in mind for securing her some temporary identity papers hinged upon having a photograph. There is something else which might prove invaluable, if you have such an article," Munroe continued, "and that is a tag of some sort. Something your sister will recognize at a glance. If it's also something she knows you would never part with except in circumstances of extreme gravity or necessity so much the better!"

"What about your father's ring, Freda?" the Countess said promptly. "The very thing! I will go and find it, and the photograph as well," his wife exclaimed, departing on her search for the articles mentioned.

"We're getting along very nicely," Rex smiled, with the satisfied air of a staff officer whose preliminary plans were going according to schedule, mentioning to the Count that a rough plan of their house in Vienna—and the keys if he had them—were the next items of interest. "Might as well make the raid on your old quarters as unobtrusive and easy as possible," he grinned in boyish enthusiasm at the prospects of putting his eye on the Ring, "whereas it might ruin everything to be caught jimmying an entry in the back window route. Incidentally, have you any idea what the situation will be regarding the house I mean?"

"The last I heard the property was simply shut up. I was advised to that effect about three months ago by an old friend who passed through Brussels on his way to South America," von Armburg replied. "I do not think the Nazis would proceed any further at present," he added, "as the property comprises part of our estate and the gross revenue, which is confiscated during my absence, would cease if they broke up my holdings and sold them off piecemeal."

"Here they are!" the Countess announced triumphantly, returning at that moment with a photograph and the ring.

"What lovely design!" Rex ejaculated, accepting the proffered article of jewelry. "And a fairly good fit too!" nodding his head in a gesture of satisfaction as he tried it on. "Right—then, that settles the picture! Now we come to the most important consideration. She constitutes the greater hazard on this expedition."

"Undoubtedly," his host admitted. "Having a woman on your hands will complicate matters in more ways than one. It would be a dangerous enough undertaking with a man as your accomplice, but..." he paused, and spreading his hands in a gesture of resignation, said with a note of perplexity in his voice, "being a girl and a fugitive besides, how will you manage to escape detection beyond my comprehension, especially when you reach the frontier, because it will be impossible for you to pass her through the control without identity papers of any kind!"

"That has already occurred to me, but there is a way out... I think," Rex murmured, his brow wrinkled in deep furrows of thoughtful concentration.

"How so?" the others exclaimed with excited curiosity.

"The little scheme I have in mind calls for the co-operation of Sir Charles, and involves a trip back to London; but it's a good one and worth trying. If it fails, I shall have to think up some other way, that's all. But, to continue," he went on, thus tactfully avoiding any further reference to that particular difficulty, "in view of the surveillance maintained over Olga by the Secret Police, it's quite evident we cannot advise her through the usual channels that I am coming, or for what purpose; which means that she cannot be forewarned."

"I am afraid so. To write and hint anything relative to your mission, even indirectly, would be fatal." "Do you think it's possible to advise her through a trusted friend of yours? Perhaps a member of your political party could do that much for us," Munroe urged upon them, striving to find some way of achieving advance communication with the girl.

There were two objections to that course, he was advised: one being that ordinary friends could no longer be trusted in a Germany under the ruthless domination of brutal Nazism, where even members of the same family stooped to betray one another, although the informers knew the consequences would be ghastly and in some cases absolutely fatal. With regard to members of the Monarchist Party, whose only hope of safety lay in their anonymity, such a move, with everyone approaching Olga subject to investigation—would be tantamount to betrayal of the intermediary."

"Under those circumstances there is only one course left," Rex gave in, with a shrug of dejected resignation. "I'll just have to gamble on how, where and when I can get in touch with her."

"Which reminds me," the Countess suddenly bethought herself. "I have a very good photograph of my sister which was taken in Vienna about three years ago, but it is a splendid likeness and will help Mr. Munroe to recognize Olga quite easily."

"Here they are!" the Countess announced triumphantly, returning at that moment with a photograph and the ring.

"What lovely design!" Rex ejaculated, accepting the proffered article of jewelry. "And a fairly good fit too!" nodding his head in a gesture of satisfaction as he tried it on. "Right—then, that settles the picture! Now we come to the most important consideration. She constitutes the greater hazard on this expedition."

"Undoubtedly," his host admitted. "Having a woman on your hands will complicate matters in more ways than one. It would be a dangerous enough undertaking with a man as your accomplice, but..." he paused, and spreading his hands in a gesture of resignation, said with a note of perplexity in his voice, "being a girl and a fugitive besides, how will you manage to escape detection beyond my comprehension, especially when you reach the frontier, because it will be impossible for you to pass her through the control without identity papers of any kind!"

"That has already occurred to me, but there is a way out... I think," Rex murmured, his brow wrinkled in deep furrows of thoughtful concentration.

"How so?" the others exclaimed with excited curiosity.

"The little scheme I have in mind calls for the co-operation of Sir Charles, and involves a trip back to London; but it's a good one and worth trying. If it fails, I shall have to think up some other way, that's all. But, to continue," he went on, thus tactfully avoiding any further reference to that particular difficulty, "in view of the surveillance maintained over Olga by the Secret Police, it's quite evident we cannot advise her through the usual channels that I am coming, or for what purpose; which means that she cannot be forewarned."

"I am afraid so. To write and hint anything relative to your mission, even indirectly, would be fatal." "Do you think it's possible to advise her through a trusted friend of yours? Perhaps a member of your political party could do that much for us," Munroe urged upon them, striving to find some way of achieving advance communication with the girl.

There were two objections to that course, he was advised: one being that ordinary friends could no longer be trusted in a Germany under the ruthless domination of brutal Nazism, where even members of the same family stooped to betray one another, although the informers knew the consequences would be ghastly and in some cases absolutely fatal. With regard to members of the Monarchist Party, whose only hope of safety lay in their anonymity, such a move, with everyone approaching Olga subject to investigation—would be tantamount to betrayal of the intermediary."

"Under those circumstances there is only one course left," Rex gave in, with a shrug of dejected resignation. "I'll just have to gamble on how, where and when I can get in touch with her."

"Which reminds me," the Countess suddenly bethought herself. "I have a very good photograph of my sister which was taken in Vienna about three years ago, but it is a splendid likeness and will help Mr. Munroe to recognize Olga quite easily."

"That is something I was going to request in any event," Rex looked with keen interest towards his hostess. "Because the scheme I have in mind for securing her some temporary identity papers hinged upon having a photograph. There is something else which might prove invaluable, if you have such an article," Munroe continued, "and that is a tag of some sort. Something your sister will recognize at a glance. If it's also something she knows you would never part with except in circumstances of extreme gravity or necessity so much the better!"

"What about your father's ring, Freda?" the Countess said promptly. "The very thing! I will go and find it, and the photograph as well," his wife exclaimed, departing on her search for the articles mentioned.

"We're getting along very nicely," Rex smiled, with the satisfied air of a staff officer whose preliminary plans were going according to schedule, mentioning to the Count that a rough plan of their house in Vienna—and the keys if he had them—were the next items of interest. "Might

Hints for the Household

For those of you who are sending boxes regularly to the boys in the armed forces an extra supply of jams and jellies this year will be a necessity. A necessity for the folks at home but what a precious luxury for the men who are away. There just isn't anything you can put in that box that will give him a bigger thrill, a real touch of home.

With the short bolt method there won't be any extra work involved in making this raspberry jam, so be sure to have lots on hand. The boys will probably want to share it with their less-fortunate friends and they'll be very proud of the fact that it was made at home.

Red Raspberry Jam
6 1/2 cups (2 1/2 lbs.) sugar
4 cups (2 lbs.) raspberries
1/2 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare this jam, wash and pick about 2 quarts of ripe raspberries. Measure sugar and prepared fruit into a large kettle, mix well, and bring to a full rolling boil over hottest fire. Stir constantly before and while boiling. Boil hard 1 minute. Remove from fire and stir in fruit pectin. Then stir and skim by turns for just a minute to cool slightly, to prevent floating fruit. Pour quickly. Paraffin and cover at once. Makes about 10 glasses (8 fluid ounces each).

HERE'S A ROYAL ROAD TO SUCCESSFUL JELLY-MAKING

Today, there's a quick, sure, easy way to make jams and jellies turn out perfect every time. No standing over a hot stove for hours the way our grandmothers did. Grandmother would never have dared approach the jam and jelly making season with the confident manner of the modern homemaker. The use of fruit pectin has eliminated the hazards she had to cope with. She would certainly think the short-bolt method sheer magic and remember how discouraged she was when after hours of work, her favorite recipe didn't quite come off.

So with the use of fully ripe fruit and accurate measurement of ingredients your success is assured. The element of doubt has been removed and in a short time that would have raised grandmother's eyebrows in amazement, you'll view with pride those blessed little jars which are so indispensable for adding color to meals—twice blessed in their double purpose of being both decorative and good to eat.

Strawberry Jelly
4 cups (2 lbs.) berry juice
2 tablespoons lemon juice
8 cups (3 1/2 lbs.) sugar
1 bottle fruit pectin

To prepare juice, crush thoroughly or grind about 3 quarts fully ripe berries. Place in jelly cloth or bag and squeeze out juice. Squeeze and strain juice from 1 medium lemon. Measure sugar and juice into large saucepan and mix. Bring to a boil over hottest fire and at once add fruit pectin, stirring constantly. Then bring to a full rolling boil and boil hard one-half minute. Remove from fire, skin, pour quickly. Paraffin

HEALTH

A HEALTH SERVICE OF THE CANADIAN MEDICAL ASSOCIATION AND LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES IN CANADA

WHAT ARE WE FIGHTING FOR? OR HEALTH VS. DEMONSTRATION

A striking feature of the story of preventive medicine in Canada and in probably other countries is that progress is very rapid in one way: it is slow in another, that is, the fact that the efficacy of a medical method or machinery of prevention has been demonstrated to the full yet it is not adopted universally as one would expect.

Toronto began to pasteurize her entire milk supply as early as 1914. The results were immediate. The infant mortality rate fell at once. Bone tuberculosis of the bovine type originating in Toronto disappeared over night and there has not been a single case in Toronto since. One would have expected that this method of saving life on a wholesale scale would have been adopted universally without delay. But no such thing happened. Indeed it was only in 1928—after a lapse of 24 years—that a law prohibiting the sale of raw milk generally was passed in Ontario, largely by virtue of the really courageous action of Mitchell P. Hepburn, a Premier who cares more about public health than most political leaders. And so far not a single province in Canada has followed suit.

Various Canadian cities have demonstrated that diphtheria can be eliminated entirely from a community by the general use of Toxoid. In some cities there has not been a single case of diphtheria to say nothing of deaths for years—and yet in some Canadian cities the record is far from enviable. In some Canadian cities, notably Hamilton and Brantford, there has not been a single case in many years. In Canada in the last year of record (1939) there were 2,961 cases and 336 deaths. In the same year in the City of Quebec alone there were 673 cases and 29 deaths.

The efficacy of full-time health service is proven to the hilt. In the Province of Quebec, largely by the help of the Rockefeller Foundation, sixty counties have an efficient full-time health service. The results in the Province and in the City of Quebec have been spectacular. Yet full-time health service has not been adopted generally by the other provinces—and in rural areas generally as a result of sickness and death rates have remained high.

These facts are true because there has been a serious omission in our plan for the elimination of unnecessary disease and death. We have failed to provide means for widespread and rapid education of the public—and this is necessary because only by such means will the taxpayer and voter in whose hands the decision finally lies take the necessary steps to provide the machinery of prevention. And yet there is still difficulty in procuring urgently needed funds. If a government and the public to provide health education throughout Canada. The wealthy man has become accustomed to giving generously to the building of a new wing to the hospital rather than to such an intangible thing as education. Bricks and mortar he can see and understand. Governments build institutions with alacrity. The voter is easily convinced on the benevolence of governmental intentions. He can see it.

And yet the future of the country depends not on the number of our literature on a large scale, to pre-institutions for the ill and undisciplined. The contrary indeed. Were the principles of preventive medicine applied we would keep hospital beds empty and eliminate the need for expensive institutional care.

It is high time for a change of heart on the part of legislators and public alike. Money should be found to prepare, produce and distribute pure radio presentations on the subject of health conservation, as well as those used to advertise tooth paste and chewing gum, to send organizers throughout Canada to develop committees and organize public opinion to deal with special problems where such action is needed.

The development of more public opinion in favor of public health measures which are obviously necessary is a crying need in Canada at this time. We need to keep our people healthy at all times. In war-time we should remember that the health and security of Canadians is one of the main things we are fighting for. Health is a war-time need because health is essential to victory; and health education is the means to this end in peace and war alike.

TOP TO TOE FRAGRANCE

Personal daintiness is one of the most important assets of any woman, and there is no excuse for carelessness. Now that warm days are here, be sure to keep fresh and fragrant. To guard against unpleasant breath, use a mouth wash frequently. A simple and effective mouth wash can be made at home by adding a few drops of myrrh to half a glass of water. Clean your teeth regularly. Incidentally, you'll find dental floss most helpful.

Is your hair clean and shining? It's simple enough if you give it a little attention. Shampoo frequently. Hair shampoo will solve this problem, but don't neglect to brush your hair vigorously and often. Massage the scalp occasionally with bay rum.

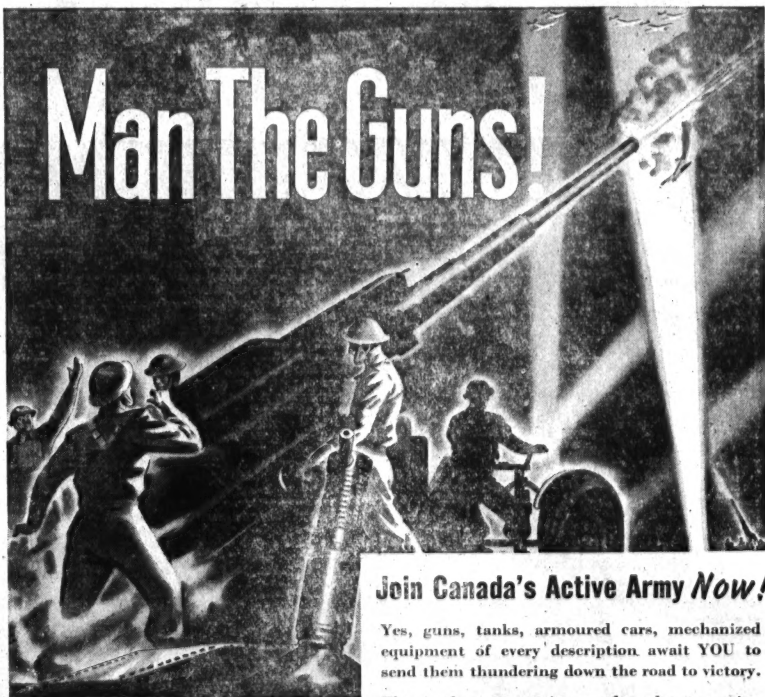

Perspiration is one of the most constant of summer worries. Don't try to prevent perspiration, because this is a most essential bodily function, and you'll start all sorts of complications if you stop it. You can, however, prevent perspiration odour. Wash frequently with the lovely new palmolive soap to ensure thorough cleansing, then dab some deodorant cream under your armpits. Keep the armpits free from hair, of course.

If you have any difficulty in keeping your feet cool and dainty, rub them with vinegar, then spray them with talcum powder.

Watch your clothes, especially underthings. Hang clothes on a hanger immediately you take them off, and put them in a draught to air.

My beauty booklet is full of helpful advice. Send four one-cent stamps for your copy and ask about your personal worries. Address: Miss Barbara Lynn, Box 75, Station B., Montreal, Que.
